This video art work is one component of a three-channel installation that reveals the surreal aesthetics of a landscape represented through computation, virtual reality and digital cartography and modeling. It stems from a research project in conversation with archaeologists at the University of Chicago that analyzes and narrates the continuing strategic importance of conflicted archaeological landscapes in Southern Afghanistan. In doing so, this work exposes the peculiar and surreal aesthetics and politics of remotely sensed landscapes.